It's always been one of the things that make a 1966 like a 1966 car.

Just as important, our engineers haven't been digging their feet either. That Gidigable Texaco, for instance, is one of North America's two front-wheel drive cars. (The other Gidigable's Gidigable's North America only air cooled six is a 1981 car. So is the only two axle drive car.)

And the best thing about all these GM finds is that they don't cost you the customer any more. The innovations are included in the price of the car. That's why GM values the safety a bit differently than the industry.

It's like there's this one, can look so good in people

The Explorers

In these imaginations, these boys have built a rugged ship, well able to cross that mighty ocean and carry them into an exciting exploration of a strange land.

Imagination can be used in other ways. At International Nickel, it helped develop a nickel-steamman-boatman ally for use in marine propeller construction. As a result of this development, propellers are being made that are lighter, yet stronger than other types and highly resistant to corrosion and cavitation—a long problem with marine propellers.

Imaginative minds at International Nickel are also continuing to search for better ways to find, mine, smelt and refine Canadian mineral resources, thus helping to develop this country's economy. We are proud of the role nickel plays. For more than sixty of Canada's one hundred years, International Nickel has been a vital factor in its development. It will continue to be a progressive, imaginative partner in the years to come.

MACLEANS

Compiled by Mao's Cultural Revolution, China has been turned into a vast, controlled revolt festering.

CHAOS, PURGES AND A BILLION MARCHING FEET

A Maclean's editor describes an awesome spectacle: the world's largest nation deciding its future in a frenzy of mass hysteria

BY BLAIR FRASER

ON my route from Nanjing to Shanghai I met a group of 15 students from the Soviet Union who were on a 10-day visit to Red China. We got into friendly conversation at once, we drank vodka, and the Chinese suspect that capitalist-imperialism like me and "modern provisions" like them had become absolutely villainous. As we talked the loudspeaker in our railway car (which as usual was pouring out a steady stream of propaganda and Maoist uplift) came to such a deafening screech that we could no longer hear each other. When a shakedown call came, one of my new Soviet friends said, "Make you think of George Orwell's novel 1984, doesn't it?"

It was not a remark I was expected to hear from a Soviet citizen — I was astonished to realize that he'd been allowed even to know about Orwell's novel "1984" of a Communist society — but I agreed. China does make the visitor think of 1984 and its satirical apparatus of Newspeak, Doublethink and the Thought Police.

But just now, as the threat of the "Cultural Revolution" that has been going on for the past year, China makes a Western traveler think of something else. It has been turned into one vast, continuous revolt meeting. Every day in every city, from long before daylight to long after dark, gangs of young, fanatic, headbangers leap streets and sidewalks onto the marching, singing, chanting of 20 million hysterically faithful boys and girls who sing every change on one glorifying theme: "We love, we adore, we worship Chairman Mao!"

I left China before the enormous outbursts of mid-June, which were staged upon by Western world thinkers to prove that Mao's hold on his people was peaking, if not decaying. They can be misread, just as glaziers, as evidence that the Cultural Revolution against Mao's enemies had not begun, in making a last-minute / comment overheard

"We've made a new kind of society and we must protect it against enemies from without subtle corruptions within"

back to the suburbs. The operation looked like a miracle of discipline. Before coming to China I'd had the notion that Red Guards "on the rampage" were like the English Mods and Rockers in the American burlesque of Berkeley. Nothing of the sort. These Chinese youngsters are fanatical for the opposite reason—they are so totally obedient, so totally devoted to the party and to Mao, so totally devoted to Chairman Mao's service.

Foreigners who live in the heart of Peking, and who doubtless witnessed the violence in the half week of August 20-25 before the Red Guards extended their orders then—but not that they had no orders. There was, indeed, in the destruction they came on, the uncontrolled and scarily memorable quality still is. Who gives orders?

Maoism sends 30 million boys and girls around China, telling them, telling them. Truly sending them these signs around a millionaire of capitalism but the old thing is, nobody will when having done the organizing. Ask who did it and you are told: "It was done by the students themselves." And the others thing of all is their need to have such a sign.

I drove from Tientsin back to Peking on a bright afternoon of early winter. There was never a moment at the 30-mile drive when we couldn't see at least one group of Red Guards on the road ahead of us, moving to the capital to pay their homage to Chairman Mao. They were chanting in their way, for Long March of the 1930s.

We stopped in calls to some of them. One group had left Tientsin that same morning, and hoped to reach Peking within three days. It included some little boys of no more than 14. Another—six girls and 14 boys, all aged 17—had not one from Shantung Province seven days before headed for Peking. They'd... continued on next

been meeting since 4 a.m., two hours before daylight, and would continue to reach until 8 p.m., two hours after dark. They'd been stopping each night in a People's Commune, in these vast islands which they entered on state buses, and leaving their food from the previous day on the way. All looked so good, so healthy.

Not all Red Guards were so lucky. I was into a Red Guard dancing in what had formerly been a classroom of No. 2 Middle School Piling. Half a dozen youngsters were stretched out on the floor looking drowsily miserable. "They're sick," said our guide unnecessarily. But what I wanted to take a picture of the classroom they stumbled to their feet, pulled up the bedsheets, and walked down to post-study quarters from Chairman Mao.

My time in Piling began fairly late in the morning. Obviously, the boys and girls were told to emulate their grandparents in the Future Long March of Chairman Mao across China to Yunnan in 1935. Actually, the shift in political wind had become vaguely necessary. Red and blue travel had been seriously paralyzed by the stormy meetings who were reacting to all directions.

Piling's main station was closed to ordinary car traffic for months, and instead for Red Guards exclusively. Piling passengers had to see an old desert station in

Workers, peasants and soldiers are "equals" — but soldiers are the most equal of all

Down in rice paddies, despite exhortations of Red Guards, it's follows age-old ways. Modern farm machinery is seen only in show-piece communes. Right: army road-patrols with Mao's message: "Don't leave heavy things to others. This is not proper."

THE OTHER HULL

A KID BROTHER GROWS UP

BY SUSAN DEXTER

DENNIS WAS CRANED UP and down the ice. He was lowering his magnificent, whirling pads to the opposition as well as the considerable ring he has in him and showing the opposition with solid consistency. In short, he was playing a good locker game.

By comparison, his brother Bobby, was the picture of uncertainty. He seemed unsure in a defined manner, looking somewhat like a wisp and will both expressive when really doing little as brother was the manner his real pieces of the game.

But every time Bobby stepped on the ice, the crowd showed itself—there is hardly a day that when Dennis has scored. "Dennis" are usually high accounts as they are every time Bobby gets under 30 yards of the puck. This was done—there is a goal that was! Meanwhile Dennis, in a slightly awkward, awkward but who was trying to hard, started only his score. "He recently marked that one, the crowd says that Dennis came within 10 yards of scoring. To all eyes it was at the Black Hawks, it seems that means it is whether they was in it but how Bobby plays the game.

"Dennis, you can be just as good a hockey player as Robert," said Mrs. Hull. "Oh, Mom, you don't mean that," replied Dennis.

The Bobby Hull mythos of fans after and more national Chicago players than brother Dennis, including various New Yorks, who by tradition was to be about in the NHL, among them it has seemed recently because it was every of our crowd, except, suddenly he was. The Mikes crowd section is still only a shadow of the Golden Era.

And if that's not the littlest probe, imagine when it does in Dennis Hull's tackle. He's just starting out and there they are, his hands in on the situation. They're off ready to go and among his hands and then he's just coming on an his brother's lane. He's never in the action given his brother is, just waiting on Bobby's reaction.

Only though Dennis found himself his last brother role even when it could be a little difficult, enough of his reputation to suggest brother Dennis was not on the per but in a home-made TV situation in which a score would Bobby pretty clearly doing Dennis but still being the power kid still!

Even now you get the feeling, talking to Dennis that he's simply caught himself, in the light of 12 to 15 minutes in action. He's not there have been brother lines, brothers playing for the same and different teams in the NHL, and Dennis still seems to have young players before. But there has never been another Bobby Hull. The eleven seasons in hockey have a broken Robert. But when he looks back, Dennis came along. Dennis was 15 years older instead of Bobby's on the jump on Dennis, and in hockey this is a great advantage. By the time young Dennis joined the Montreal Canadiens in 1957, the Bobby Hulls had begun to show their 50 goals-50-point year he had as 10 years earlier. Dennis, on the other hand, had the motivation to join the Black Hawks during the year before Bobby's illustrious scoring record with his 50-goal, 70-point season.

There has always been good pressure on Dennis as Bobby's brother, always Black Hawks coach Ben Hull, in fact, it seems, Bobby has to determine to become a major-league player in spite of the brother factor, he probably would not get out early the way his older brother Guy did.

In 1958, the season after Bobby had won his first NHL, among with Dennis and Guy, resulted from their teams in First American Cup, to St. Catharines for the Junior A league. "Guy was the first and there," says Dennis, "and while I was in my first team I was there because I was Bobby's brother. I think a basketball Guy. The first time or later they the game started my first game in it as in Bobby's first season. I think that's what Guy said and at the end of a week he went home.

From there, it was longhairs, the other Hull brothers could read being played by their brother's possession in the hockey world. An enormous sign in the club he up the road, from the Hull name, from Bobby's scoring team and championship producer from America, the back place of the world's greatest hockey player, Bobby Hull.

Dennis scored on in St. Catharines, but a week or two later some of the guys on the team and in the St. Catharines club were talking about being Bobby's brother. A few months later he was in his mother so depressed that he would not play, that he had the idea of changing his name. It was just as well he didn't since it was only the staff came that needed him in every line he scored a season with the St. Catharines. He could be the whole first season had been a dismal loss.

My problem was that Bobby was so good, an explosion. "I didn't want to continue him and yet I had him when I was doing every one I was on the ice. I got over it. Dennis told me he was determined to be a substitute in Bobby—

For Dennis, you're not up to a crowd. After some other years, but only "I don't care or want to be TV's crowdmaster" and then it's after a point before.

and the minute didn't help him play much either. "Dennis, his mother and in fact, you can be just as good a hockey player as Bobby, but in your own way." And Dennis said simply, "Oh Mom, you don't mean that."

In his fourth and final year in a junior, Dennis had begun to produce his second 40 goals this year, which, according to the Gregory, general manager of the junior league system, for the 70-point Maple Leafs in currently done good as one league.

But Dennis's new-found confidence and skill didn't last long. Once he joined the Black Hawks in 1964, that season he who had been playing his first team in a distance was now playing right in front of him. Robert Hull's "adult" manager, Dennis after the Hawks, from Toronto, gave this year, "Dad," Dennis told him, "you should see what that Robert's doing—that guy is a machine."

His father was amazed. "You don't want to get scared every day watching Robert. Don't. You want to get out there and try to do the same thing."

Dennis couldn't. Last year, following a completely successful rookie season in which he scored 30 goals and four assists in 31 games, he had the last year of his career. His goal production plummeted in the last 21 games last season to one goal and the opposition was scoring against him with increasing frequency. Dennis in the January was miserable.

But the setback is being seen in the 1966 of the Central League, also proved to be in the goal of his career. Dennis, being that means so much to him, was saying, "I continued on page 36."

Karsh's Centennial Portrait

RALPH KARSH, the photographer of a man who came to Canada as an immigrant boy from Austria in 1924, has seen most of the world's great and famous upside-down: through the facing glass of his portrait camera, and as "Karl of Ottens" has publicly done since that day after men to make the name of Canada's capital better to the world. And yet he is at work in our royal family's domain directly responsible to that is the manner of emperor he seldom even to direct the equipment he used to produce the most recent formal portrait of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, on the opposite page. "It is I am sure the work of the painter that I do not dream the revision in any way," he says.

This is Karsh's third photograph of the Queen and it was made (photographer's talk of "making" are "take up" a photograph) in Buckingham Palace last July on behalf of the Canadian government. It commemorates the queen's 50th birthday and the Queen's planned visit to Ottawa and Expo 67 between June 29 and July 5. For her sitting, Mrs. Karsh also wore a white gown, gowns decorated with crystals and pearls and a Russian "fringe" from given to Queen Alexandra as a silver-wedding gift in 1912. Prince Philip's uniform is that of an admiral of the fleet, and both wear robes of the Order of the Garter.

As well as this portrait, Karsh made several other photographs, including a formal portrait of the Queen alone, which is displayed to replace the 1959 photograph that now hangs in schools, courthouses and civic buildings across Canada. Colored printing ink is sensitive to light and these prints have begun to fade.

The Canadian government's distribution agency for the royal photographs is the Miller Stevens agency of Toronto, whose main concern is to make sure that personal surroundings the use of royal portraits is observed. Prince rules alone, for instance: that the Queen's portrait may be used on a "commemorative object" (a cup, perhaps) as long as it is of a "permanent nature and free from advertising." But you can't use it on labels or wrapping paper or anything likely to end up being trampled under foot. You can use it on "suits and headgear" but not on any other article of clothing, or on household linen. And the portrait may not be used "in any article to assist the sale of any other article"—apart from the example. Dickson Miller, of Miller Stevens, says, "We have a considerable responsibility to uphold the dignity of the monarchy."

Stronger than dirt.

Buy a car and you're thrown headlong into a battle against rust and snow and sand and sleet and slush and grease.

Buy a Volvo 740 GLE and you get a car that comes prepared for the battle.

A Volvo loses the showroom presentation with 15 pounds of paint. From the body, completely rust proofed with electrolysis, there's one coat of paint (2 years, 1 undercoat, 3 hand rubbed coats).

But we don't stop there. A lot of cars look good on the outside while they're quietly being eaten away from the inside. To prevent that, we build an undercoat composition in all large metal sealants inside the Volvo body. Then we apply a clear coat over the entire car.

What's in that car will ensure it has a body that's out of a vault. And inside the vault you get an engine that's as powerful, the Volvo runs away from every other compact as it class. Sports Car Graphic Magazine described the Volvo engine as... one of the best, if not THE best, reliable, rugged and unbreakable car engines being built today. Which means it's an engine that can withstand the abuse of road as well as the state of the car can withstand the abuse of rust.

So you see, Volvo's are not only stronger than dirt. They're stronger than humans, even.

It was checked by a telephone call by Peter Lutz on his August morning

"That Hitler's ghost will haunt Western Germany," says Lutz. "We would have seen the light for political unity if we had — say 1945 — spontaneously eliminated every street with Nazi intent and background." As a Jew, he captures the thoughts of millions of his people by the Nazis, yet he is willing to change sides with Stalin and become a butcher. I sympathize with his confusion, but he cannot deny that if placed like the Nazis here is much right to his government's actions.

The old is as old as Europe. The new you can hardly imagine. Ancient ruins, patterns of history, fragments of worlds — all the Europe you've wanted to see is still there as glory. Yet Europe is something new. Where the Twentieth is honoured, where discotheques swing late into the night where suppers are expatriate Renaissance inspired. And the Comedies find you there. To London? Vienna? Shannon? Paris, Zurich, Glasgow, Copenhagen, Frankfurt and Moscow. The life centres of both Europe and the old river.

To make the bargain even better, Air Canada adds its own 18-21 day Economy Saverfare return fees, and Air Canada's Fly Now - Fly Later™ plan lets you pay just 10% down and the balance is up in 24 months - leaves you free to spend more on pleasure in Europe.

There are other issues in Europe, old and new. Choose your destination and take advantage of our Canada's "Open Cities Plan" which lets you see so much more of Europe in no more time than it takes Air Canada to send European passengers — and any one of them again a dose to the exciting possibilities of the "Open Cities Plan".
